"His work is the extrapolation of a negative καιρος" (Adorno, Theodor W. Aesthetic Theory. Edited by Gretel Adorno and Rolf Tiedemann. Translated by Robert Hullot-Kentor. London: Continuum, 2004. p. 33.) -- in reference to Beckett

καιρος = time/period

Example from Aeschines:

πόθεν οὖν ἐπὶ τὴν μεταβολὴν ἦλθε τῶν πραγμάτων, οὗτος γάρ ἐστιν ὁ δεύτερος καιρός,
"Now how it was that he came to reverse his policies (for this is the second period)"

Further instances in Adorno:

"Accordingly, contrary to current aesthetic views, the whole in truth exists only for the sake of its parts -- that is, its καιρος the instant -- and not the reverse; what works in opposition to mimesis ultimately seeks to serve it." (Adorno, Theodor W. Aesthetic Theory. Edited by Gretel Adorno and Rolf Tiedemann. Translated by Robert Hullot-Kentor. London: Continuum, 2004. p. 246.)

"This consciousness is no vague timeliness, no καιρος that would justify the course of a world history, that is not the development of truth." (Adorno, Theodor W. Aesthetic Theory. Edited by Gretel Adorno and Rolf Tiedemann. Translated by Robert Hullot-Kentor. London: Continuum, 2004. p. 251.)
