

My 2015 academic year in review

This year was a good year for me in terms of academia. I started my job as a Senior Lecturer at Birkbeck, I launched the Open Library of Humanities with a substantial Mellon grant, and I finished writing two books that I hope will be published next year (Password and The Anxiety of Academia). I also began supervising some really great Ph.D. students, including Stuart Lawson on the politics of open access. Here's a breakdown of what came out this year. Obviously, given publishing timescales, this is less a reflection on what I did (apart from conferences) and more the fact that it just came out. I still derive some satisfaction from seeing it written down, though!

Merry Christmas, all!
